The Federal Reserve said the economic recovery was still too slow to bring down unemployment, reaffirming its commitment to buy $600 billion in bonds to stimulate growth and create jobs. Although the indexes closed higher, investors were on edge after Monday's failed rally and also due to the loss of momentum in some of this year's best performers such as CRM, FFIV, NFLX, PCLN, RVBD, etc. This market is not easy to trade and strategies are being tested more than ever. It has become a chat game and the winners are the traders who can properly choose the bounce in the right names. The Dow Jones Industrial Average ended up a 48.10 points, or 0.42%, to close at 11,476. The S&P 500 rose 1.13 points, or 0.09%, to close at 1241, and the NASDAQ was up 2.81 points, or 0.11%, to finish at 2627. The CBOE Volatility Index: VIX closed down 0.34%, at $17.61, after trading as low as $17.33, on overall sitting volume of 51,000 contracts compared to 274,000 call contracts. Resistance is at its ten-day moving average of $18.24. Volatility increased at the end, even as statistics show the tendency for implied volatility to trend lower after the December Fed meeting. 60-day implied volatility traded at 70 and 90-day implied volatility is at 68, indicating slightly lower price movement in the outer month. SPDR S&P 500 ETF (SPY) - Getting Report volatility was stable at active volume as traders used clarity given by the Fed to adjust positions. SPY touched a new 52-week high at $125.23 intraday but came back to close $0.11, at $124.67, just slightly below its September 22, 2008 high of $124.75. Overall, 1.55 million put contracts traded compared to 733,000 call contracts, with December 120 sitting as the most active range on 364,200 contracts. January sitting option implied volatility is at 17 and is at 18, below his 26-week average of 22. The PowerShares QQQ Trust (QQQQ) closed $0.10, at $54.40, on overall sitting volume of 174,000 contracts compared to 152,000 call contracts. January pit option implied volatility is at 18.18 February is at 20, versus its six-month average of 23, indicating falling price movement. QQQQ has support on its 10-day moving average of $53.99, with psychological resistance from its high of $55.07 as of November 2007. Overseas, Ireland's Parliament vote is expected on Wednesday where the IMF/EU lifeline will be debated. Early indications suggest opposition parties may vote to reject the aid, although it seems the votes are there for passage. The EU leaders' summit will take place on Thursday and Friday and while nothing is expected too substantive, there will be plenty of headlines about the sovereign debt situation in Europe and the officials' ability to agree on a way to deal with pockets of debt problems and strengthen confidence in the single currency. Kit Juckes, a currency strategist at Societe Generale, told the Wall Street Journal: If the summit fails to offer investors a solution to these issues, we'll see a further loss of confidence in the euro and recruiter could easily move back to a full-fledged crisis. Control tests are designed to provide useful marketing data to companies. A test could involve monitoring consumer after a new product, or it could involve measure consumer response to an ad. Controlled tests are typically cheap and easier to set up than standard tests. For example, a mini-test can be done in one or several locations in a retail store. In this case, conjunction is obtained from the store. When the patient doesn't improve quickly and the doctors are stung, they order more tests. Even after bouncing down hard last week's lows, the stock market appeared unhealthy, with jumping important signs and acute sensitivity to new stimuli. The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell more than 300 points to below 16,200 at the start of trading Tuesday, after sharp declines overseas. Shares in Asia and Europe fell more than 2% overnight. The latest setback in global markets following a weak Chinese manufacturing report - with stocks in Asia and Europe losing more than 2% overnight - will surely trigger calls for the S&P 500 (GSPC) should retest the recent lows, which sit about 5% below Monday's closing quote. It's all from the standard the standard trading desktop playbook, which holds that true V bottoms are rare. Even though we pretty much had a flawless V last October, it's more common to knock around the vicinity of market lows for a while to see if the lower prices attract strong-handed buyers - or not. It's easy to get caught up in technical merchant tactics at times when market prices start to move faster than perceived fundamentals. But the bottom line is, the market needs to prove it has priced into this whole China slowdown/emerging-market spill-over/Federal Reserve coin throwing litany of concerns. Getting the latest market data and news with the Yahoo Finance AppPart of this process involves bullish forecasters rethinking their optimism. It began, with Morgan Stanley strategists joining their counterparts at Credit Suisse to targeted upside for the S&P 500. Both companies still see the index returning to the vicinity of its highs between 2100 and 2200, but moderating enthusiasm acknowledges how far these targets now appear. It's quite possible that the more significant downsizing of expectations occurs with corporate earnings forecasts. As analysts return to Labor Day, it will be time to make their estimates come true with the pace of economic activity. That shouldn't be much of a problem for U.S.-based companies, but the global companies are at risk of more cutting and preannouncements of curtailing profit prospects. There is undoubtedly much more at work in this sale than the sheer customization of corporate earnings models. It was a stock market entering the year that didn't own investors much after nearly six years of gains. It wasn't cheap to begin with, but was stilled pretty for months, and now is to values already priced in corporate debt and emerging market currency prices. Moreover, some anxiety makes complete sense ahead of what could soon be the first start of a Fed tightening cycle in 11 years, after seven years of zero-percent short-term rates. We all know a small hike of zero makes little difference in the real economy, but who is willing to bet that other investors are sure to treat it as no big deal? Oh, and have you heard it's September now, the worst month on average for stocks? This adds to the general reluctance of investors to play the herd and assume we are all clear for a lasting rebound, even if the real-time record of these seasonal patterns is very spotty. Meanwhile, the frequent reminders that the Chinese government had a loose grip at best on the domestic economy there, were unable to thwart selling in stocks and undertake a clumsy currency devaluation juice confidence in central authorities once considered competent and all-powerful. And here we can't even manage to open trade in ETFs without a hitch? Who also knows what psychological effect Donald Trump's surge in the polls has on broad psychology? The market correction quietly got underway the week of July 20 - the same week Trump's poll support among Republicans broke out above 20% on the way past 30%. If not just his animosity for free trade and immigration, then the fact that the experts in the middle have been so blindsided by his populist upwelling of support, enough to make us all question whether those in charge know as much as they were given credit for knowing. Unsettled, unhealthy markets give rise to musings about a world that can always be portrayed as disorderly and risky. But for many investors, all these anxieties will be eased by a successful retest of the market low — or, better yet, a bounce by the stock indexes even to get back there. There won't be a need to call the lab for the results - they'll be obvious on your screens. More from Yahoo Finance! Here's what will be new when you sit down to do your 2020 taxes in the new year. Rumors of Bill Ackman's demise were greatly exaggerated. After a brutal three-year stretch from 2015 to 2017, Ackman's Pershing Square Holdings Ltd (OTC: PSHZF) has now put back years of stellar returns, and Ackman has eased fears he has lost his stock-picking touch. As of Dec. 22, Pershing Square's net asset value was 67.5% year-to-date in 2020. Pershing Square's stock is also up 82% in 2020, crushing the S&P 500's 15.4% gains. From 2015 to 2017, Ackman's fund lost about 30% of its NAV and beamed the S&P 500 by about 60%. However, Ackman followed up in 2019 with another big year in 2020.Related Link: Q3 13F Roundup: How Buffett, Einhorn, Ackman and others adjusted their PortfoliosAckman's Big Year: Ackman boosted his 2020 returns with a spectacular $27 million short bet on corporate bonds back in March that ultimately made him a $2.6 billion gain in what some called one of the biggest trades in history. Ackman also made headlines this year by raising $4 billion to launch his Pershing Square Tontine Holdings Ltd (NYSE: PSTH) SPAC, which is now the largest SPAC in the market. At the time of the IPO in July, Ackman said the SPAC planned to take about six months to identify a target and announce a deal in the first quarter of 2021. Even after Pershing Square's big run is concentrated in 2020, the stock is still trading at a significant discount to NAV. Pershing's stock marketing portfolio is relatively concentrated. Because of the firm's most recent quarterly filing, Pershing held shares of just seven shares. His three largest holdings include Lowe's Companies Inc (NYSE: LOW), Chipotle Mexican Grill, Inc. (NYSE: CMG) and Restaurant Brands International Inc (NYSE: QSR). Benzinga's Take: Ackman has a long record of home run trades and dud investments. In years like 2020, he looks like an investment genius, while previous bets on Valeant Pharmaceuticals and Borders bookstores have let investors scratch their heads. Investors should look for Ackman and his fund to continue to be high-risk, high-reward investments in 2021 and beyond. Wall Street's investment companies are burning the midnight oil as we approach the end of 2020, publishing their year-end notes and their New Year's prognostications, both for investors' build-up. There's the obvious point: we're in a moment of rising markets, and investor sentiment is riding high now that the election is settled and COVID vaccines have emergency approval and get into the distribution networks. However, the lockdown policy put in place to combat the virus this winter is slowing the economic recovery. Whether the economy will truly tank or not remains to be seen. Meanwhile, Raymond James strategist Tavis McCourt has published his take on the current situation, and his comments carry consideration. First, McCourt suggests the investors are focused on the good news: [The] equity market is more focused on vaccine deployment and complete reopening of economies in 2021, and so far, negative data points have largely been brushed aside. McCourt writes of the next two years: We believe the logical outcome of 2021 (and 2022 for that matter) is a likely return to normalcy with strong EPS growth offset by lower P/Es that hinders a change in the vaccine story. We expect cyclical sectors and smaller cap stocks to continue to perform, as is typical in early cycle markets... The research analysts at Raymond James are looking to the markets for the 'real' purchases, and their picks carry a closer look. They tapped high-yielding dividend payers as an investment game of choice. The TipRanks database sheds some additional light on three of JPM's picks — stocks with dividends yielding 7% or better — and that the investment firm sees upside or better by 10%. New Residential Investment (NRZ)The real estate investment trust (REIT) segment has long been known for its high and reliable dividends, a function promoted by tax regulations that stipulate that these companies must return a certain percentage of profits directly to investors. Based in New York City, New Residential Investment is typical of its sector. The company's portfolio includes residential mortgages, mortgage loan servicing rights and more. NRZ focuses its operations on the residential housing sector. NRZ is a mid-cap company, with a market value of $4.13 billion and a portfolio worth $5.72 billion. The company's revenues have been rising since the second quarter of 2020, after steep losses during the 'corona recession' of Q1. However, the third-quarter earnings came in at 19 cents per share, down from 54 cents in the year-ago quarter. But even with that loss, NRZ took care of the 2017. In fact, it did more than that. The increase the Q3 dividend, to 15 cents per common share, in a continuation of an interesting story. Back in Q1, the company peddle back the common share dividend to 5 cents, in a move to preserve capital during the coronavirus crisis. The company has since raised the dividend by 5 cents in each subsequent quarter, and the Q4 payment, announced in mid-December, is for 20 cents per common share. At that rate, the dividend rises to 80 cents and the yield is over 7.87%. In addition to raising the dividend, NRZ also announced a share buyback program totaling $100 million. The buyback is for preferred stock shares, and goes along with the existing repurchase policy of common shares. Analyst Stephen Laws, in its coverage of NRZ for Raymond James, writes, We expect strong origin volumes and attractive profit on sales margins to drive strong near-term results, and we still expect a dividend increase in 4Q [...] For Q4 2020, we increase our core earnings estimate by $0.02 per share to $0.35 per share. For 2021, we increase our core earnings estimate by $0.08 per share to $1.31 per share. In accordance with these comments, Laws rates the stock a Performer (i.e. Buy). Its $11.50 target price implies a one-year upside of 16%. (To watch Laws' record, click here) It's not often that the analysts all agree on a stock, so when that happens, noting, NRZ's Strong Buy consensus rating is based on a unanimous 8 Buys. The stock's $11.36 average price target marks a 14% and a change from the current share price of $9.93. (See NRZ stock analysis on TipRanks) Fidus Investment Corporation (FDUS)Next up is a business development corporation, Fidus Investment. This company is one of many in the mid-market business financing niche, offering debt solutions and capital access to smaller companies that may not be able to ensure lending from the larger markets. Fidus' portfolio focuses on senior insured debt and mezzanine debt for companies worth between $10 million and $150 million. Fidus has investments in 68 companies with a total value of $697 million. The bulk of that portfolio, 59%, is second-lending debt, with the rest mainly divided between subordinate debt, first-lending debt and equity-related securities. The company saw revenue gain through the second and third quarters of 2020, after negative results in Q1. The third-quarter top line came in at -$21 million, to an impressive 129% sequential. Since the third quarter, Fidus has declared its dividend for Q4, at 30 cents per common share, the same as the previous two quarter, plus an extra 4-cent special dividend authorized by the Board of Directors. This brings the total payment for the quarter at 34 cents per common share too and place the yield at 9.5%. Raymond James analyst Robert Dodd likes what he sees in Fidus, especially the dividend outlook. We still see the risk/reward as attractive at current levels - with stocks trading under book, solid predicted base dividend base dividends from Nil... We firmly project FDUS its quarterly base dividend of $0.30/share through our projection period. As a result, we do project moderate complementarity... Dodd puts an Outperform (i.e. Buy) rating on the stock, and sets a target price of $14. At current levels, that target indicates an upside of 10.5% in the following months. (To watch Dodd's record, click here) Wall Street is somewhat more divided on FDUS shares, a circumstance reflected in the Moderate Buy analyst consensus rating. That rating is based on 4 reviews, including 2 Buys and 2 Holds. Shares are priced at $12.66, and the $13.33 average price target indicates a modest 5% upside from current levels. (See FDUS stock analysis on TipRanks) TPG RE Finance Trust (TRTX)Return to the REIT sector, we look at TPG RE Finance Trust, the property finance arm of global asset firm TPG. This REIT, with an $820 million market cap, has built a portfolio of commercial mortgage lances worth a total total of $5.5 billion. The company is a supplier for original commercial mortgage loans starting at $50 million, mainly in the U.S. primary markets. The bulk of the company's loans and properties are centered in the East.Like many finance companies, TPG RE Finance made serious losses in Q1 due to the coronavirus pandemic crisis - but has since recovered to a large extent. Revenues in Q3 hit $48 million, up 9% year-over-year. During the quarter, TPG received loan repayments of $199.6 million, a solid result, and when the quarter ended, the company handed over $225.6 million in cash or cash equivalents. The company was able to easily fund its dividend, up from 20 cents per common share, in Q3. For Q4, the company recently declared not only the 20-cent regular payment, but also an 18-cent non-recurring special cash dividend. Taken together, the dividends yield a yield of 7.5%, nearly 4x higher than average found below S&P 500; P-listed companies. Returning to Raymond James' REIT expert Stephen Laws, we find that he's bullish on TRTX as well. TRTX has underperformed since reporting 3Q results, which we believe creates an attractive buying opportunity... We expect core earnings to continue to take advantage of the LIBORS floors in loans and expect new investments to resume in 1Q21. The company's portfolio combined retail and hotel exposure of 14%, which is below the sector average of 19%... To this end, Laws rates TRTX A strong Buy and its $13 price target suggests ~22% upside in 2021. (To watch Laws' record, click here) This stock also has a Strong Buy rating from the analyst consensus, based on 3 unanimous Buy reviews set in recent weeks. Shares are priced at $10.67 and the average target of $11.00 indicates a modest 3% upside of current levels. The New York Stock Exchange announced late Thursday that it had begun denominating proceedings three Chinese telecom companies to comply with an executive order by President Donald Trump targeting companies affiliated with China's military. Mortgage rates closed 2020 around the lowest levels on record. The 30-year fixed-rate mortgage averaged 2.67% for the week ending Dec. 31, up a basis mark from the new record low of 2.66% set the week before. Freddie Mac (FMCC) reported Thursday. But many of its top stocks aren't obvious. Momentum can be an elusive quality, but it's also pretty easy to see. Currently, it is evident on BioNano Genomics' (BNGO) side. In December, shares of the life sciences company accumulated a powerful 328%. Apparently, investors in the cytogenetic specialist's steady stream of positive developments are buying. The company disclosed Monday that its genome mapping platform Saphyr is accredited by the College of American Pathologists in the U.S. The platform will be used by Bionano's customer Praxis Genomics, marking it as the first company to offer a lab developed test (LDT) using entire genome analysis. Saphyr's optical genome mapping is an alternative to traditional cytogenetic methods and Maxim analyst Jason McCarthy thinks this could be a game-changer. Digital cytogenetics are among the areas where Saphyr has the potential to change the clinical diagnostic landscape, the 5-star analyst said. Current methods are labor and time intensive, and therefore expensive. Saphyr offers a more efficient and streamlined alternative as well as potentially improved diagnostic yield. After 20 LDTs are developed, we expect adoption for Saphyr to increase, driving revenues for Bionano. While the accreditation is the first of its kind in the US, in Europe, entire genome clinical tests are already underway across multiple applications, including hereditary disorders and leukemia. The news followed the recent publication of an article that further highlighted Saphyr's qualities. In a comparison test, PacBio's chemistry could only detect 72% of the major SVs (structural variants) tracked by Saphyr AI. McCarthy reiterated a Buy Rating on BNGO shares along with a $2 price target. As a result of Bionano's latest surge, the figure points to a 5% disadvantage of current levels. (To watch McCarthy's record, click here) Two other analysts recently posted BNGO reviews, with one saying Buy and the other recommending a Keep on, adding to a Moderate Buy consensus rating. That said, it's hard to keep up with the current speed of share gains, and the $1.42 average price target, indicates downside to 32%.
